Trenchard, 1786.] pp. 204, 8 plates, 3 tables. 8vo. AAS. BA. HC. LOC. NL. This was the most ambitious project in magazine publication yet attempted in this country. It was modeled upon the Gentleman's Magazine, and London Magazine, and was established by Mathew Carey, Thomas Seddon, William Spotswood, Charles Cist, and James Trenchard. Carey withdrew from the conduct of the magazine in December, 1786. Following which it was edited by Alexander James Dallas for nearly three years. His attempt to report for its pages the Proceedings of the Pennsylvania Convention for the ratification of the Federal Constitution, so offended the Federalists, as to cause them to withdraw their subscriptions. At about this time, and perhaps from the same cause, proposals were issued for the publication of a magazine to be called, The Philadelphia Magazine and universal asylum, which appears not to have reached the stage of publication. In March, 1790, the Columbian Magazine was transferred to new proprietors, between whom and the projectors of the Philadelphia Magazine, an agreement was entered into to unite the two, and the joint proprietorship resolved to continue the publication of the Columbian Magazine, on an enlarged and improved plan, with the title of The Universal Asylum and Columbian Magazine. By a Society of Gentlemen. Under this title a new volume numbering was begun, and publication continued to the end of the year 1792, when, in consequence of the passage of a law denying monthly publications the use of the mails, the proprietors relinquished their undertaking, and publication ceased with the number for December, 1792. The earlier numbers were printed by Charles Cist, whose name appears among the owners. In 1789, it was printed, for short times, by Trenchard and Stewart, and by William Spotswood. With the change in its name it was, Printed by William Young, for the Proprietors, until its publication ceased. The engraved title and numerous plates, in the first series, were the work of James Trenchard. The title pages of the Universal Asylum were engraved by Thackara & Valance, and contain a scene drawn by Charles Willson Peale.

The motto reads: "To instruct and to entertain—To cheer the saddened brow of adversity, and to curb licentiousness—To aid the politician and assist the moralist—To inform the body politick of whatever may be necessary for their political existence—And to dispel ignorance, are duties incumbent on editors of periodical publications." Beginning August 1st, 1786, it was called, Hampshire Herald. With the motto from Horace: Omne tulit punctum, qui miscuit utile dulci, lectorem delectando, pariterque monendo. The date when the Herald ceased publication is not known; but it was not continued beyond March, 1787, when John Russell established The Hampshire Chronicle, and may have terminated about the above date this year.

It was printed on good paper, and regularly paged, and was indexed—the advertisements appearing in a supplement each week. The price for the first and third volumes was nine shillings per annum, which was reduced to eight shillings for the second volume. In August 1787, the partnership was dissolved, and from that date the Gazette was published "by Josiah Meigs, at the south corner of the Green, fronting the Market," until its publication ceased probably February 12, 1789. The most important contribution the Gazette contains is "The Anarchiad, a New-England poem," written by David Humphreys, Joel Barlow, John Trumbull, and Lemuel Hopkins, which appeared in twelve numbers during the years 1786 and 1787.	AUCTION VALUES

The proposed Prayer Book met with much criticism and opposition in the church, owing to its radical changes, and was never adopted. It was reprinted in London, in 1789, in an edition of fifty copies, without the eight engraved pages of music, for the use of the Anglican Bishops in convocation, together with the Application of the American Church, for discussion. It was superseded by a new revision, printed in Philadelphia, in 1790, which continued in use.

THE SEC- OND EDITION. Philadelphia: Printed by Mathew Carey. M.DCC.LXXXVII. AAS. Established, and publication continued under his editorship, by Mathew Carey, until December, 1792; when, in consequence of a regulation of the post-office, it was refused admittance "into the post-office on any terms." With the issue for January, 1790, the title was changed to, The American Museum, or, universal magazine, and published by Carey, Stewart and Company until December, 1791, after which it was issued "From the Press of M. Carey," until the end. In the opinion of George Washington, and other competent judges of its time, it was a magazine of great excellencies. Its contributors were many of the most eminent writers of that day. And the volumes are of much documentary value to the historian of that period. The earlier numbers were frequently reprinted. And interesting lists of subscribers accompany the work. Mathew Carey, in his Autobiography, says of it: "I was much attached to this work, and had great reluctance to abandon it, unproductive and vexatious as was the management of it, but at length I sang its requiem at the close of the year 1792." 20196 THE AMERICAN U S A RECORDER, AND THE CHARLESTOWN ADVERTISER. SATURDAY, DECEMBER 29, 1787.] Lexington: Printed by John and Fielding Bradford, at their Printing-Office in Main Street. 1787. 4to. This was the first newspaper printed in Kentucky, and the second to be published west of the Alleghany Mountains. Founded by John Bradford, who was popularly called "Old Wisdom." Fielding Bradford was associated with him in its publication. The desire of the second convention to consider a separate government from that of Virginia, which met at Danville in 1785, to give its proceedings as wide publicity as possible, led to its founding. The first issues were printed on sheets of about the size of a half-sheet of letter paper, and the rude cuts and ornaments were made by Bradford himself. The change from the first quaint spelling of Kentucke occurred with the first issue in March, 1789, and was occasioned by the action of the Virginia Legislature in requiring that certain advertising matter should be published in the Kentucky Gazette. John Bradford continued its publication to March 31, 1802, at which date he placed his son Daniel Bradford in charge, and purchased and conducted himself, the Kentucky Herald, which he edited for seven years entirely separate from the Gazette, to the conduct of which he returned on 26 September, 1809. He then sold his interests to Thomas Smith, who associated John Bickley with him in its management. In 1814, Fielding Bradford junior, son of one of the original proprietors, secured control, and associated with him in its management, John Norvell, and remained in possession until 1825, when it again passed into the possession of John Bradford. In 1835, his son Daniel Bradford again became its proprietor, associating with him in its control his nephew, Thomas Bradford. In 1840, Joshua Cunningham, formerly a foreman in the office, purchased the Gazette, which, owing to the failure of health and loss of patronage, he finally ceased issuing in 1848.	AUCTION VALUES

Established in 1788, by John Markland and John M'Iver, and continued by them to the close of the year 1794. From 1795 to the close of the year 1800, the Gazette was published by Peter Freneau and Seth Paine. Late in the year 1800, John M'Iver resumed its publication, and in March, 1801, David Rogerson Williams was admitted to partnership under, at first, the firm name of J. M'Iver & D. R. Williams, and afterwards as M'Iver & Williams, to the year 1807, when Williams became sole publisher to September, 1809. Late in that year Peter Freneau was admitted to partuership, under the firm name of Freneau & Williams, which continued to the year 1811. Beginning in January, 1811, the Gazette was published by Peter Freneau & Co. to the end of the year; and, in January, 1812, J. Elliott and Samuel Richards, two practical printers, who formed the Company with Freneau, printed and published the Gazette to the end of the year 1814. From the first of July, 1815, to the close of 1816, the Gazette was printed by Samuel Haveland Skinner, and published by Ebenezer Smith Thomas, a nephew of Isaiah Thomas. In January, 1816, Samuel Haveland Skinner and Joseph Whilden, under the firm name of Skinner & Whilden, became its printers and publishers to the end of 1819, when Skinner withdrew, leaving the sole conduct of the Gazette to Joseph Whilden from 1820 to 1822. After other changes the Gazette was absorbed by The Courier in 1837, of which the News and Courier of the present day is the direct successor.

Established, in continuation of The Northern Centinel, and Lansingburgh Advertiser, which the publishers had been printing, with the same motto, at that place. In the issue for March 31st, they state that : "During the time they were framing this [Federal] Constitution, the Printers of the Northern Centinel conceived it a duty incumbent on them to prepare the minds of their readers for its reception, . . . but . . . to be impartial shall be their steady aim." In removing to Albany, the Publishers showed the courage of their convictions ; but not much business discretion. In no place was party spirit higher, and the anti-federalists, led by Peter Yates, and Abraham Lansing, after burning the Constitution, did not hesitate to attack with missiles the federalists who had nailed a copy of the Constitution to a pine tree and were parading in honor of its ratification. This incident was afterwards ridiculed in The Albaniad, an epic poem. By Pilgarlic. in 1791. In the same issue, notice is given that the firm of Claxton & Babcock is dissolved, and all demands upon the partnership will be settled by John Babcock. A few issues of the Herald were made by J. Babcock & Co., in April ; but before April 28th, the Press was removed back to Lansingburgh, and the Herald "Printed, every Monday, by Babcock & Hickock, corner of King and Hoosack-Streets." In the issue for June 7, 1790, after an urgent request for immediate payment of indebtedness, the Printers add that : "In order that this business may be brought to a close without procrastination, the publication of the Herald, will, for the present, cease."

The Gazette was continued by his son, Andrew Brown, junior, and Samuel Relf, until September, 1801, when Brown withdrew. It was then continued by Relf until his death, on the 16 February, 1823, when it passed into the proprietorship of Stevenson Smith, and William Gouge; and was finally merged, after consolidation with the Intelligencer, into The North American, in 1840. In 1789, inspired by Francis Hopkinson's poem of "The New roof," a cut of the Federal Temple was added to the heading. This was dropped in May of that year. In April, 1790, the paper was enlarged to folio and its title altered to, The Federal Gazette and Philadelphia Daily Advertiser. In 1794, the title was changed to, Philadelphia Gazette; and shortly after to the Philadelphia Gazette and universal daily advertiser. After the first of January, 1804, it was called, Relf's Philadelphia Gazette and daily advertiser, until Relf's death in 1823.	AUCTION VALUES

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 30, 1789.] Published [on Wednesdays and Saturdays] by John Fenno, No. 86, William-Street, New-York. 1789. fol. AAS. BM. LOC. Established by John Fenno, in New York, and moved to Philadelphia, in April, 1790, when that city became the seat of the national government. In May, 1789, the Printing Office was moved to No. 9, Maiden-Lane, near the Oswego-Market. It was published as a semi-weekly to December, 1793, when a daily evening edition was begun under the title of, Gazette of the United States, and daily evening advertiser. In 1796, publication was changed to a morning issue under the title of Gazette of the United States and Philadelphia daily advertiser. The Gazette was ably conducted by its founder until his death, from yellow fever, 14 September, 1798. His son, John Ward Fenno, continued its publication to 1800, when it passed into the possession of Caleb P. Wayne, who sold it, within two years, to Enos Bronson. In May, 1802, Elihu Chauncey was admitted to partnership, and the title shortened to Gazette of the United States. In February, 1804, the title was changed to read: United States Gazette. In 1805, Elihu Chauncey retired, and the Gazette was continued by Enos Bronson alone to March, 1818, when a consolidation was effected with the True American, under the name of Union, with the titles of both papers as sub-headings, under the joint management of Bronson and Smith. In 1820, the consolidated interests were sold to James G. Watts, and George H. Hart, with Joseph R. Chandler as editor. In April, 1823, the old title of United States Gazette was revived. In November, 1826, Chandler purchased the interests of James G. Watts, becoming sole proprietor, in 1829, when he acquired George H. Hart's interests. In 1847, the Gazette was sold, and merged into The North American, its name being retained in the title for several years.
